

City College has argued that this was a strategic plan to cope with considerable growth which had seen the College emerge as the major provider for vocational skills for 14-19 year olds. Student numbers have been increasing in recent years with 16,000 students enrolled in 2006. Of the 90% of students coming from Norfolk, 50% are from greater Norwich with the remaining 10% from outside the county. The majority are dependant on public transport which is why the College wishes to remain on its existing centrally placed site. Assessment of the campus shows that the College is undersized by approximately 6000sq. metres. The Society endorses the College's view that it has to stay on and redevelop the current site, whose buildings are no longer fit for purpose and the Society is in favour of the proposed massing of the buidings towards the Ipswich Road. Because the site is cramped the Society is concerned that the plans must include as much flexibility as possible to accommodate changing demands and to ensure that there is no erosion of the limited green space because of unforeseen demands for extra teaching units. The taller buidings also need to be designed to allow for additional growth. Given that this is a small site the Society wondered whether it would be possible to make an underground car park to free up space."
